2019 marks five years of the Narendra Modi government.
What are its implications and importance?

India's 72nd Independence Day has just passed by. It's milestone 75th is just three years away at 2022. 2014 marked a historic year when the Narendra Modi government rocked the nation by coming to power at the Centre after an unprecedented election. 2019 will mark five years from then when the next elections are due in the first half of the year.

The year before that is crucial. 2018 could well be decisive in shaping the future course of the nation. For this year will bring together once again a major thrust and last push forward by the government in political and policy direction, unite the opposition together in a bind to alter the political discourse next year, reshape regional politics and economy, take stock of the last four years of the government, influence the new global economic order and be the last great opportunity to translate governance into mandate.

Crucially, these developments today have the potential to position India as the world's most influential democracy in the second half of the 21st century, giving it the ability to shape dynamically and dramatically the evolving global order.

That is why the SKOCH Group has decided "THE FIFTH YEAR" as the theme of the State of Governance Summit 2018.

The Seven Pillars of the Summit are:

1. Translating Governance to Mandate
2. Investing in New India - Finding the Money
3. The Fifth Year: Undercurrents in Participatory Democracy
4. The Digital Estate
5. Is De-globalisation the New World Order?
6. Making Data Protection a Reality
7. Hackers at the Gate

We look forward to welcoming you!

1230-1400	INVESTING IN NEW INDIA - FINDING THE MONEY
	Discussion Framework: New India will be built on infrastructure. Infrastructure needs investments. This is currently in short supply. Legacy sub-optimal policy decisions, poorly drafted PPP contracts and unwillingness of the state government agencies to pay up, even though they are contractually bound to bring to the table the 'public' part of responsibilities in PPP projects has created an impression of investments being high risk and a potential danger of infrastructure sector turning into another non performing asset. The socio-economic impact of infrastructure companies and concessionaires exiting the projects and leaving the government to deal with the debt and inoperative infrastructure can be devastating. With the banking sector already in a serious NPA crisis and markets still sceptical on infrastructure, there are very few funding options left. In all earnestness, the Modi Government has taken steps to de-risk future investments in infrastructure and made the proposition attractive. In light of the above this panel examines the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. What can be done to attract investments and where could these investments come from? 2. How can user charges eg. toll collection be optimised? 3. The necessity of institutions like LIC or pension funds investing in and injecting cash in critical infrastructure companies, the social relevance of such a decision and medium to long-term economic payback? 4. How to dramatically speed up the arbitration and award process and bring a sense of urgency in all stakeholders to ease cash flows in existing infrastructure projects?

THE FIFTH YEAR

1530-1700	THE FIFTH YEAR: UNDERCURRENTS IN PARTICIPATORY DEMOCRACY
	Discussion Framework: 72nd year since independence but we still haven't been able to free ourselves from the clutches of biases and prejudices. Questioning should be an important pillar to participation but in India, tough and sometimes, the very basic questions are not even brought to the floor. The mood is such that people ask what "would" be asked and not what "should" be asked. Big, bombastic issues take up center stage even at mass debates while the real issues that bother Indians remain hidden simply because nobody wants to sound so "basic" and "self-centered". In light of the above, the panel will throw light on the following points and discuss them. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Dissent fuels any democracy. Then why are only popular opinions being talked about and heard? What are the barriers that act as deterrent in transforming the undercurrents and really vital issues into firing boardroom conversations? 2. There is a lot of ruing over lack of employment. But is it really lack of employment that mars the country's growth or is lack of qualitative opportunities that is leading to larger problems like migration and even unrest towards the present situation? 3. For a democracy to be participatory, it is vital that the citizens are informed accurately and not selectively. This one change alone can decide the popular public opinion and media, being the fourth pillar, has a huge role to play in this. However, there is a thin line between being a watchdog and being coercive. How far has the Indian media been able to strike this balance? How easy or difficult is it for media houses to scrape themselves off any alignment or judgment? And where does the responsibility lie? Who decides when the torchbearers have lost their way and are treading dangerous paths? Government, society or media barons? 4. The enormous youth population is extremely heterogeneous with varied backgrounds, educational, social and economic and so very different perceptions. However, one trait that binds the majority of this population is their kaleidoscopic view of the world around and their reluctance to involve in global matters that "should" bother them but "don't". To make this democracy participatory, we need to bring in more involvement from this section of society. The task is challenging given the fact that the youth are driven by very specific issues that are mostly need-based and popular. So what strategies or waves need to be engineered to mobilize the mindsets of the youth population of the country in the coming elections, and make them actively participate?

	Discussion Framework: Digital India has been the cornerstone of Modi Government since 2014. The thrust on anything Digital or electronic has been unparalleled. This is meant to help improve India's notoriously slow delivery systems and eliminate corruption. Government claims savings of upwards of 90000 crores on account of Aadhaar alone. At the same, time civil society and independent expert voices have been advising caution. This panel examines the following issues: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. How has Indian policy making in 'Digital' performed thus far? 2. How can policy making related to 'Digital' be strengthened? 3. How to provide adequate protection for whistleblowers, aggrieved parties and put in place a reporting mechanism?

THE FIFTH YEAR

1130-1300	IS DE-GLOBALISATION THE NEW WORLD ORDER?
	Discussion Framework: Globalisation and opening up of Indian economy since 1991 has delivered rich dividends. The country historically caught-up in a 5% growth trap due to License-Permit Raj came of age and reported high single-digit or even double-digit growth post opening up of the economy. This lifted more than 200 million Indians out of poverty. With President Trump at the helm in the US promoting an America First policy, the world braces itself for another trade war. A war that should logically be an America vs China battle due to a hugely lopsided balance of trade, India too seems to have willy-nilly wandered into this mine-field through its recent policy directions on Data Localization, e-Commerce and Privacy. Perception is that these directly and adversely impact global service providers in India through non-trade barriers. The proponents of such moves believe that it will generate jobs, protect Indian industry and be good for the economy if an India First policy is pursued across sectors. While industry offers death of innovation argument, this panel seeks answers to the difficult questions: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Is inward looking policy on services a prudent policy? 2. Should e-commerce be micromanaged? 3. What is the likely impact of de-globalisation approach to Indian economy and regulation? 4. How do you balance India's need for FDI and the imperatives to raise barriers?

THE FIFTH YEAR

1400-1530	MAKING DATA PROTECTION A REALITY
	Discussion Framework: 2017-18 saw data protection and privacy at the heart of the most heated courtroom battle in the Supreme Court. While privacy has been declared a fundamental right, judgement on Aadhaar is reserved. After a year of research, the Srikrishna Committee submitted its report to the Ministry of Electronics & Information Technology along with a legislation draft on data protection titled, “The Personal Data Protection Bill, 2018”, which is yet to be passed in the parliament. While, there was criticism of the Committee for being opaque and not including civil society in discussions, quite a few of its recommendations have found acceptance while others are being hotly contested. This panel examines the following issues: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Given the overarching scope of data protection, is there a need for a central data protection authority (DPA) as well as sectoral regulators? 2. Is it advisable to create criminal liability for data breaches and give judicial powers to DPA and sectoral regulators? 3. Should the government be exempt from data protection liabilities? 4. What will be the impact of cost of the compliance on business and functionality?

THE FIFTH YEAR

1530-1700	HACKERS AT THE GATE
	Discussion Framework: Having embraced a digital-first policy, practically everyone in India is busy collecting data on everyone else. Large centralised depositories in areas like identity and elsewhere may act like a honeypot for cyber-attacks. These can be conducted at the fraction of a cost of conventional warfare, subversion or crime. Cross-linking of databases and no-alternative to digital services provisioning makes the idea of a cyber black-out very attractive and potentially devastating. 90% of the total amount of data available has been collected in the past two years due to digitisation and has made us more vulnerable to such attacks. The issues that this panel examines: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. What does the world order on cyber security look like? 2. Do we have a Cyber security doctrine? Should we have laws and implementation agencies supporting this? 3. How does our defence as well as homeland security technical capability be kept up to speed with that of the hackers? Where will the people come from?
